The Current Situation of Legal Aid Provision in Tanzania

Legal Aid is the provision of assistance to people otherwise unable to afford legal representation and access to the court system. Legal aid is regarded as central in providing access to justice by ensuring equality before the law, the right to counsel and the right to a fair trial. In Tanzania the situation of Legal Aid Provision differs from place to place; in most cases the provision of legal aid is still a challenge as majority of legal aid provision organizations are urban- oriented while majority of Tanzanian with low income are in rural areas.

Furthermore, the mandate of legal aid provision organizations to operate in Tanzania originated from Article 20 of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania of 1977 and other international policies and laws that explain the freedom of associations. Presence of the recognition of associations in the country, that enables them to operate freely without breaking rules, laws and policy of the country, gave power to the Legal Aid Clinics as associations to operate freely and receive support from governmental sectors considering the Article 20 (1), which states that, Every person is entitled to freedom, subject to the laws of the land, to freely and peaceably assemble, associate and cooperate with other persons, express views publicly, and more specially to form or join associations or organizations formed for the purposes of preserving or furthering his beliefs or interests or any other interests.

Moreover, International Laws also support the above point of freedom of association in any Democratic Country. For instance, Article 22 (1) of International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) states that, everyone shall have the right to freedom of association with others, including the right to form and join trade unions for the protection of his interests. Furthermore, article 22 (2) continues to explain that, no restrictions should be placed on the ones exercising this right other than those who are prescribed by law and whenever necessary in a democratic society for the interests of national security or public safety, public order (ordre public), the protection of public health or morals or the protection of the rights and freedom of others. This article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on members of the armed forces and the police in their exercise of this right. Therefore, according to the law above, any legal aid organization is free to operate without interference from government.

Even though there are some policies and laws that support legal aid providers as shown above, there are some challenges like shortage of resources and funds (financial support) that organizations are still facing that hinder their effectiveness. But apart from those challenges the organizations are increasing in number and also quality of their services. The situation it gives room for community members to access justice in easier way in both rural and urban areas. According to Tanzania Networking for Legal Aid Providers (TANLAP) report of 2014 shows that, among 30 regions of Tanzania, 27 regions have more than one legal aid clinics which offers legal aid of either for free or with low cost (cost that is affordable to the community members of particular society).

Majority of Tanzanians seems to lack the opportunity to access legal aid services simply because of lack of awareness about where they can get the support that they are in need of. According to TANLAP report of 2014 shows that, majority of community members are not aware on where they can receive legal aid either for free or by low cost. All in all, even though there are challenges and successes in provision of legal aid in Tanzania that caused by several factors as shown above, this Directory can be used as one of the measurement of improving awareness of community members on where they can receive legal aid either for free or with minimum cost as the Directory indicate at list one of legal aid centre in each region of Tanzania mainland and Island.
